Our Lady of the Angels Academy is on the threshold of its third decade. Its emerging identity is at once a product of dynamically forming tradition and of anticipated change. Progressing from the past through the present we move into the future with a

Each generation has a vocation, presented by current events; its response is given to the changing face of ancient problems: poverty, war, and disease. To be effective it must strike deeply, with an understanding that they exist only in relation to man, that men are involved in the problems and their solution. Because men and nations grow, acquiring wisdom, the forces opposing their development can be leveled. They represent deficiency, which positive action can remedy.

During his Presidency, John F. Kennedy vitalized this belief. Through the Alliance for Progress and the Peace Corps, he united Americans in efforts for the general development of men. Assuming stature as a world statesman he improved Soviet-American relations and negotiated the test ban treaty. Slowly the world began to assemble under his leadership.

Then, he was assassinated. Swiftly, the leader was vanquished. But he had communicated his ideas; they continue to develop in other minds, in our minds. The ever-present challenges press. "The torch has been passed to a new generation of Americans."

The power to determine the direction of a school is channeled through its faculty. Their teaching and counseling permeate the Academy with the restless energy of growth. Exploring their chosen fields, at the same time they transmit their learning to others.

Throughout the senior year, a personal sense of direction develops. Closely inter-related with the academic life at first, it gradually assumes an independent existence. The life in common becomes the intelligent decision for and response to individual love.

We, as OLA's twentieth graduating class, pass from her portals into her annals. Yet, we have brought with us a surge of new life: new ideas, new queries, new ambitions. We asked that our abilities be directed, and in return we gave of our maturing personalities.

Participation in common classes led to both personal and group development. The sciences strengthened our capabilities for precise thought, while the arts increased our capacities for understanding man's own human nature. And these lessons we applied outside of classes through our traditions and our extra-curricular activities.

Challenges beckoned us forward and we answered their call. Victories and defeats were perhaps equal in number, but the wealth of school spirit far exceeded them both. God, too, challenged us, and our answer to Him was given in terms of love.

Today, new challenges and opportunities approach us. The completion of four high school years is not a finale, rather it is a universal invitation to direct our ideas, together with the knowledge we have gained, toward human improvement. Grateful for the past, we feel the responsibility to do that for which we have been prepared and for which we search the future.

In one flow of movement, the school evolves and, within its framework, individuals develop. Disciplined by studies, their minds become capable of forming more keenly perceptive judgments. Their personalities mature as the relationships with one another deepen.

ACTIVITIES

CAREER DAY

Sister Marie de Lourdes, S.S.J. (main speaker)

Mrs. Dorothy Roberts (dental hygienist),
Miss Sheila Butler (medical secretary), Miss
Dolores Kiejko (X-ray technician)

Miss Mary Ellen Leary (R.N.), Mrs. Theresalee Bertinuson
(physical therapist), Sister Mary Amelia, CSSF (principal)

Miss Jean Tucker (journalist), Mrs.
Carol Bazyk (former airline stewardess)

Miss Marie Robideau (librarian), Miss
Janice McKenna (teacher)

The keynote speaker's address framed the basic idea of the Academy's first Career Day: courage, judgment, integrity, and dedication must govern the choice and realization of any career, if it is to be worth the effort it will demand. All of the occupations represented embody unique forms of service, geared to the interests and talents of the individuals who are involved in them: journalism for those concerned with the press as a form for public affairs; education and library work for those who believe that the learning of the past is the key to the problems of the present; the medical sphere for those who seek to heal the whole man, restoring physical and mental well-being; a career in the skies for those who enjoy helping others relax.

COLLEGE DAY

The Catholic college offers a way of life centered in learning and imbued with an awareness of God. This is the Academy's spirit also and so it made Catholic institutions the core of its first College Day. The different schools discussed their curricula, activities and scholarship opportunities with interested students, who found the diverse campus offerings unified in the keynote speech of the afternoon.

Miss Mary Lou Burke (College of Our Lady of the Elms), her assistant, Carolyn Davis, Virginia McGloin, Georgiann Davis, Jane Doyle, Susan Kowal

WONDERLAND BY NIGHT

Two class officers welcome escorts from Marianapolis to an evening of dancing and relaxation.

Between dances girls and escorts take time to socialize.

Make this one slow and dreamy . . .

A little warm up and we'll do fine.

. . . But Angelites are always willing to learn.

Only a few will give a lively number a try . . .

Partying parents keep an eye on the action.

Hot Jazz, cool blues — and ice-cold punch top off the evening.

SPORTS

For the sports fan, OLA offers the chance to both spectate and to participate. Athletic interest focuses on ball, from the whoosh of volleyballs skimming nets to the smack of leather on wood. Keen competition intensifies the excitement when the girls match skills against each other or confront teams of opposing schools.

Fast-moving from the starting tick of the clock, the Academy's basketball game with Enfield High School gave the team a chance to try out the new roving-player rules, in the rugged action of a close game. At the start, Enfield seized the lead and, relaxing during the half-time, our team planned a man to man defensive. The Academy players steadily narrowed a ten-point gap until they were dragging by only one point in the last quarter. Then, the opposition sent in some lively replacements whose quick maneuvers edged in a six point lead for a closing score of 30 to 24.

During the spring and fall, the sedate Academy lawns become alive with racing, jumping students, shouting the familiar cries of, "She made it to third!" and, "She's out!" Experienced players trounce the rookies every time, but whether as the highlight of a gym session or the climax to a grinder sale, the nation's favorite pastime gets an enthusiastic reception.

Getting the volleyball over the net is not as easy as it looks, even with four pairs of hands shoving it, but once over, maybe the players will have time to map out strategy before it comes sailing back again.

EVENTS OF THE YEAR

John Donne said, "No man is an island." We, engrossed in the academic life, are vitally concerned with the affairs of the world around us, involved wherever men are involved. Our generation is now forming its commitment to the struggle for the universal recognition of human worth, and the accompanying chance for every man to explore his own potential, unimpeded by poverty, disease, or prejudice. We believe that, working together, men can better battle their own ignorance and so we make ourselves constantly aware of the events affecting other human lives. Recorded history and that now taking shape are a series of human decisions; to be involved with men is to be active in the history of the world.

The evolution of a school involves the growth and change of many individuals. Pulsating with their life, it emerges as a house of intellect, absorbing and teaching contemporary thought. Its learning is the impetus for the many minds who study there, arousing the awareness of a personal direction.
